Bellefield's Annual Safety Classes - Train to be a Hero!

When it comes to taking risks, good emergency planning goes a long way to help minimize any danger. But simply having a plan does not minimize your risk or enhance the safety of your office occupants. When it comes to most things in life, planning and risk have an inverse relation. The more planning you do, the less risk you have. And this certainly rings true for Fire and Life Safety Planning. But having a Fire Safety Plan is only the beginning, it's also imperative that you're prepared for other potential life threatening emergencies or disasters such as: earthquakes, tornadoes, hurricanes, bomb threats, suspicious packages, explosions, hazardous materials, power failure, pandemic, flood, armed or violent intruder, and medical emergencies. The more comprehensive your office's fire and life safety program is, the more you lower your risk and exposure. It's your duty to ensure that your designated emergency staff and employees are knowledgeable in their responsibilities, and know what to do in the event of a fire and other emergencies. Today you must be prepared and plan for other potential threats beyond a building fire. It seems like almost every day we hear and watch our various news broadcasts covering a multitude of events from earthquakes, floods, and hurricanes, to random shootings of innocent people. The new reality has placed even more challenges on the real estate industry, its owners, and property management companies to escalate planning requirements for the safety of their tenants and occupants. Unlike fire, multi-hazard planning is not regulated but many building owners and property management companies have recognized the importance and are taking a best practises approach by offering free training for their tenants and their office occupants and company leaders.

Rainworks Stencils Being Installed in September

Last year, Bellefield commissioned local artists Peregrine Church and Xack Fischer to create custom stencils and install them to decorate Bellefield's buildings front porches and benches. These "Rain Works" were a pure delight because the art work appears only when it rains. As part of the Art Program here at BellefieldOP, we are inviting tenants to view the re-stenciling that will be done by the Management team throughout September at all the buildings on campus. Two art installations will be done per building so if you see our teams working in front of your building, come on out and we'll show you what we're doing!
